

Project Feeling

Hu Heng Beijing Normal University

During this week's study in Tokyo Gakugei University, I feel that I have gained a lot: knowledge, friendship and international vision. The teacher in BNU asked me why I applied to go to this project, and I said I wanted to have an international, not just local perspective on education. Meanwhile, because I was interested in Japanese culture, I also wanted to know about Japanese traditional culture and K12 education system. All these helped me realize.

Everyone I met in Japan was friendly and polite, especially the teachers at Tokyo Gakugei University who took good care of us and always paid attention to us. I felt very touched. Secondly, students in TGU were very patient, taking us to eat delicious food and accompany us back to the hotel. During the conversation with teachers and classmates, I learned a lot about Japan and had new views on many educational issues.

It is worth mentioning that I got to know a lovely family economics teacher during my visit to the high school. She showed us her textbooks and classrooms, which are the teaching contents lacking in China, so we were very interested in it. Before leaving high school, she gave me a book about it, and I liked her very much.

In a nutshell, I would like to thank the organizers for this pleasant exchange trip, which has made me understand Japanese culture and education from various aspects. Thanks to every teacher and student in TGU, your careful arrangement of the project makes me feel the earnest and rigorous style of Japan, which is worth learning from. I hope the Asian campus project can be better and better.
